Segment One—Harvey Dunn: What Lies Beneath

South Dakota native Harvey Dunn's successful career as an artist and teacher spanned two world wars and the Great Depression. Now, many years after his death, technology has revealed some lost works by Dunn - lost because they were painted-over by the artist himself. The South Dakota Art Museum in Brookings is about to reveal some of those lost works in an upcoming exhibit.

Producer: Brian Gevik

Segment Two—Harry's Story

After retiring, Harry Moshier, Sr. of Sisseton took up his old hobby again: painting. Five years ago Harry decided to capture some of the rich history of northeast South Dakota in his paintings. He painted many towns and typically would turn his sets of paintings of the towns into calendars and then sell them to the town and donate all the profits to the local Boy Scout troop. Harry was asked by Sisseton's Stavig House Museum committee to paint on location during their annual Stavig House celebration. He did, and it was a big success. After that, the Sisseton Schools adult education staff asked him to teach an art class for adults. Eventually Harry agreed and that was a big success as well. After the first session of classes the students and Harry started an art group and called themselves the "South Dakota Artists of the Prairies." The group is now 54 members strong. They have exhibited their work at a couple art shows around the area and now sell their work through an art gallery in Sisseton.

Producer: Melissa Sievers

Segment Three—Bearly Carving

Rick Wieczorek of Sturgis uses a chainsaw to carve different animals. His bears are especially popular and sell well at the many art fairs, festivals and shows that he and wife Vicky enter and attend. Wieczorek also demonstrates his craft at the shows and always draws a lot of interest from spectators.

Producer: Chad Andersen

Segment Four—Flower Art

Marie Ann Robinson of Clark, South Dakota grows all her own flowers and creates pressed flower artworks from them. She has exhibited and sold pieces throughout the Midwest, and has done commission work for clients as far away as Thailand. She teaches many classes and has gained recent attention for her pressed artwork depicting Mt. Rushmore

Producer: Rina Bellew

Segment One—South Dakota Kayak Challenge

This year, the annual kayak race covers 76 miles of the Missouri River between Yankton and Sioux City on the federally managed Missouri National Scenic Riverway. Tim and Kim Cowman of Vermillion talk about kayaking, competition, and the river ecosystem. Tim works for the U.S. Geological Survey and has a lot to say about the singular nature of this last 'wild' stretch of the Missouri.

Producer: Brian Gevik

Segment Two—Aberdeen Swimmer Michael Andrew

NCAA competition is still years away for or Aberdeen swimmer Michael Andrew but the 10-year-old is already drawing national attention. Andrew, who swims for the Aberdeen Aquaholics, has set six national age group records - and now owns every South Dakota individual short-course mark for the 9-10 division. Michael set his first national record - the 50-meter freestyle - in January at the Midwest All-Star Invitational in Lawrence, Kansas. He has since boosted that record, while adding marks in the 50-meter breaststroke, backstroke, butterfly and 100-meter individual medley, which combines all four strokes. Michael comes from an athletic family. The story of their mutual athletic dream begins in South Africa and passes through Europe before settling in Aberdeen.

Producer: Melissa Sievers

Segment Three—Throwback Throwdown: The Sioux Falls Rollerdollz

This group of high-energy skaters is one of a handful of regional teams bringing back the 1950's spectator sport. They have a lot of fun and work hard at the sport, but they also find the time to stay active in the community. Last year, their fundraising efforts brought in nearly 40-thousand dollars for local charities.

Producer: Joel Rische

Segment Four—The Homemade Jamz Blues Band

The Homemade Jamz Blues Band recorded at the annual Jazzfest event in Sioux Falls.

Producer: Kevin Patten

Segment One—Hunting Preserved

A look at how two South Dakota agriculture operations are supplementing their income by raising pheasants and cultivating under-utilized ag land as wildlife habitat. The story begins at a pheasant farm in the Ipswich area and ends at a Wakonda-area hog operation that refashions itself into a hunting lodge every fall.

Producer: Chad Andersen

Segment Two—Hunter's Paradise

A profile of Maggie Lindsey, an avid hunter who happens to be the Educational Programs Coordinator for the South Dakota Department of Game, Fish, and Parks. Dakota Life follows Lindsey on a pheasant hunt south of Winner and learns about safe hunting, habitat preservation, the outdoor spirit, and the importance of caring for the land.

Producer: Brian Gevik

Segment Three—Kids, Bows, and Rock and Roll

Dakota Life travels to Yankton for an outdoor skills camp for kids. The camp is hosted by Ted Nugent, rock musician and outspoken outdoorsman. Nugent believes hunting and outdoor pursuits can keep kids off of drugs and alcohol.

Producer: Jenifer Jones

Segment Four—Tagging Team: Tracking the Monarch Butterfly

Jody Moats, a park naturalist for the South Dakota Game Fish and Parks, is participating in a study of the migratory habits of monarch butterflies. Moats has the help of some southeast South Dakota school kids as she attempts to capture and tag the winged beasts at Spirit Mound, north of Vermillion.

Producer: Jenifer Jones

Segment Five—The Custer State Park Buffalo Roundup

A review of the annual roundup of the Park herd. Interviews describe the reasons for the roundup and talk about management plans that keep the event safe and highly popular. The segment includes a scene from the "Cowboy Campfire" event held the night before the roundup. Musician Michael Martin Murphey performs.

Producer: Brian Gevik

Segment Six—Harvest by Hand

Dakota Life goes to the 2010 State Hand Corn-Picking Contest held at the Kiecksee family farm near Flandreau. John VanLiere, a retired farmer from Colton who's also a past national corn picking champ, talks about what harvest time was like when picking corn by hand was the only way to get it done.
